

Martin Luther King Day

On the third Monday in January America celebrates Martin Luther King Day. This is quite a new public holiday in the United States: it started in 1983.

Doctor Martin Luther King, Jr. ¹ was an important person in the American Civil Rights movement. He believed in non-violence.

Dr King was born on 15 January 1929 in Atlanta, Georgia and became a Baptist minister. ² At that time there was segregation in the southern states of America. Black people could not use certain types of public transport and go to the same schools and churches as white people. Dr King didn't agree with this and he protested in public. The police arrested him several times. On one occasion John F. Kennedy asked the police to free Dr King.

In many southern towns and cities, black people sat at the back of the bus and white people at the front. In 1955 in Montgomery, Alabama, one lady, Rosa Parks, refused to give her seat to a white person. The police came and arrested her. Dr King then organized a boycott of the Montgomery Bus System. No black person used a bus in Montgomery for 382 days. In the end the Supreme Court decided to stop segregation on public transport. After this victory Dr King was famous.

After this there were many other victories. He campaigned against segregation and inequality in other cities in the South. In 1963 in Birmingham, Alabama he organized another peaceful protest. He invited children and young adults to march with him. The police commissioner, Eugene 'Bull' Connor, ordered his policeman to attack them with dogs and water cannons. Televisions and newspapers all over the world showed these pictures of police brutality.

In August 1963 Dr King helped to organize the Civil Rights march on Washington, DC. On that day he gave his most famous speech: everybody now knows the phrase 'I have a dream'.

These are some lines from that speech:

'I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the colour of their skin but by the content of their character. I have a dream today.'

In Washington, DC more than 200,000 people listened to this speech.

In 1964 America passed the Civil Rights Act. This changed the lives of African-Americans forever. In this year Dr King won the Nobel Peace Prize.

On 4 April 1968 a man called James Earl Ray assassinated Dr King in Memphis.

Every year Americans remember Dr King's work by celebrating this national holiday. All the schools close for the day. People try to remember what Dr King believed in. They try to help someone on this day. It is not a day for rest but a day to think about how we can help people around us. In 1969 Dr King's wife, Coretta Scott King opened the Martin Luther King, Jr. Center in Atlanta, Georgia. She wanted to help society change in a peaceful way.
