Introduction

The coronavirus crisis is a topical issue all the more it has not been solved. So it creates a lot of panic worldwide. People react in various ways. Either they are unconscious or panic-stricken.

However, we can't deny that despite this weird situation, we must admit that this crisis has a lot to teach us. It teaches us lessons about how to face such a pandemic but it also teaches us about our personality and character. These are the two main aspects of the crisis I am going to stress on.

In this unexpected event, money is an important factor. Actually, money will be used to help the affected patients in hospitals.

Moreover, it is necessary to invest money to get a vaccine.

Besides, food that the population needs to survive. Therefore, we are in an economic and health crisis, which also means that more people have to be mobilized (get involved) to help.

This pandemic has taught us that we are not ready for such a huge unexpected event. We don't have the right behaviour for this kind of situation. For example in France, we have reached a stage where we needed the police forces to respect the president's orders.

Conclusion

Finally, I think that this situation allows them to learn how to deal with a global phenomenon causing thousands of deaths, not to give in to (céder à) panic since it is a kind of war against the invisible enemy, and on a larger scale.

NP

As a conclusion, I will say that the coronavirus is a real challenge for everyone. It put all the nations on the same footing as nobody has got the cure. So, we come to understand that we need to be strong and show solidarity and discipline if we want overcome this situation.
