Le document soumis à notre analyse est un reportage dans lequel la journaliste Michel Martin de NPR relate le sort de deux étudiantes américaines en quarantaine dans leur chambre à l'université de New York.

Nolden Nautica, n'étant pas originaire de New York doit effectuer une quarantaine. C'est pour cela qu'elle se fait livré ses repas mais cette livraison était très aléatoire car elle recevait souvent ses trois repas le soir. De plus, c'était souvent le même menu. Elle a donc exprimé son mécontentement en publiant une vidéo sur Tiktok. En réalité, elle n'a pas souffert de la solitude car elle vivait avec sa grand-mère. Elle a utilisé ce temps libre pour se détendre et apprendre à mieux connaître par internet sa colocatrice qui était logé à deux étages plus bas. Après la quarantaine et malgré toutes les difficultés rencontrées, Nolden et sa colocatrice voient l'avenir sous un angle plutôt positif. Elles n'ont pas le droit d'accueillir du monde dans leur chambre mais elles sont heureuses de pouvoir rester à New York et d'étudier.

The document is a report by Journalist Michel Martin who relates the quarantine of two students at New-York University.

As Nolden Nautica is not from NY, she must be in quarantine. That's why she asked for her meals to be delivered but she often received them at six. She posted a video on Tiktok to express her discontent.

Nolden did not suffer from loneliness because she lived with her grand-mother. She used her free-time relaxing and getting to know her roommate through the internet. When the two got united, they started helping each other reminding themselves of buying masks and sanitizers. After the quarantine the two students had to face some difficulties but they feel happy because they could study at their dreamschool.

Essay : Has covid 19 changed your daily life and your vision of life ? (100 words)

Indeed, covid 19 has changed my life and my outlook of life in general.

For myself I am frequently washing my hands (the full 20 seconds), I have stopped shaking hands, when I go out I try to keep my distance from people as much as possible, I try to avoid touching things on the subway (unfortunately I need to take mass transit for work but avoid it for non-essential tasks) . I have made the decision to stop going to the gym and I am cancelling non-essential work conferences to the extent that I can.

Also, I stop in grocery stores more frequently and buy things I like (in reasonable quantities) when I see them available. I am also going to try to get more sleep to help with my immune system.

The crisis also changed my approach of people to life and its security. I realize the importance of financial reserves and therefore value earnings more than before.

Moreover, as I had to spend these unusual times at home and had thus more free time than I was used to. I will learn new skills. I will also spend more time with my family, and perhaps, as a result, I will be able to slow down the pace of my hectic life.
