The death of Bob Marley, aged 36, from cancer yesterday robs Jamaican music of its first ambassador, and popular

The Wailers' first album 'Catch a Fire' was released in 1973 and sold well.

Robert "Bob" Nesta Marley is the greatest ever reggae singer. He spread reggae and his message of love and unity to a worldwide audience.

Marley was born in 1945 in a small village in Jamaica to a white father and black mother.

He died of cancer in 1981, aged 36.

The racist bullying he received as a child had an impact on his songwriting. He left school at the age of 14 to make music.

It took several years before they became famous.

He was given a state funeral in Jamaica according to the Rastafari tradition.

In 1975, Marley released his breakthrough song 'No Woman, No Cry', still regarded as a classic today.

Marley left Jamaica for England in 1976 to record his 'Exodus' and 'Kaya' albums.

Another album followed a year later which included the song 'I Shot The Sheriff'

He continues to be an important influence on today's music.

He met members of his future band The Wailers at a jam session.
