

Alf Montagu, 31, from Sevenoaks, Kent, England has a degree in experimental psychology from Oxford University and he had a well-paid job in marketing when he became “disenchanted” with his lifestyle about 8 years ago. Now he travels the country in a camper van spreading the Freegan message. “I thought to myself, 45 What have I been educated for? To manipulate people for my own selfish ends?” he says. “So I gave up my possessions, my flat, my whole way of life. I was letting go of one form of certainty, which was essentially material, and replacing it with a more spiritual certainty, which was more dependent on doing the right thing. I realized I wasn’t put on this world to simply work for money.” (...)

50 The Freegans have chosen a fight that will be long and difficult. No doubt, these friendly, principled souls who endeavor⁷ to change the world have morality on their side. But is it enough?

Sergio Burns, A Freegan World, September 7, 2007